

HKIE Building Division 17th Annual Seminar ADVANCED TECHNOLOGY AND DESIGN FOR BUILDABILITY IN CONSTRUCTION

13th March 2018 (Tuesday) 0900 - 1700
Theatre 2, Hong Kong Convention & Exhibition Centre

Hong Kong's construction industry is well known for its rapid construction cycles and use of specialized construction techniques for skyscrapers. However, the lack of control over the process and inadequate drive to enhance long-term competitiveness often lead to project delays and cost miscalculations. With limited R&D resources spent on cost and labor saving construction technologies and waste material reduction designs, not much could have been done to improve the situation.

The buildability development roadmap of Hong Kong has recently been reviewed with an aim to improve the overall construction efficiency and productivity, and ultimately to nurture a sophisticated construction industry capable of performing well in today's fast-growing market. This seminar aims to expound the current state of buildability performance of Hong Kong, and suggest strategies for its growth and development in future.
